

MEET THE COVER ARTIST

Shoshana Kertesz "Hannah Arendt"

Shoshana Kertesz was born in Budapest, Hungary. She wanted to be a painter since age four. Based on her artistic talent she was placed in an elementary school class that had special art education for the gifted. After that she studied visual arts at the Montazs Art School for four years. Her teachers were Jozsef Baska and Katalin Renyi. In 2003 Shoshana left Hungary and moved to Jerusalem, Israel. She continued to exhibit her artwork throughout Hungary and Israel. The works from this period show an orientation toward biblical and Jewish subjects. In her biblical paintings she uses strong expressions of solemnity and seriousness on the faces to convey the drama of the moment. "I am not concentrating solely on the story itself but mostly on the spiritual response that the story evokes in me". Her more recent works include realistic portraits of great artists, writers, poets, musicians. "I choose my subjects not just based on whom I admire but whom I can identify myself with on certain levels. For me it is also a psychological study, to make a thorough research on my subject's personality, to dig as deep as possible into their art and to live and breathe who they are in order to bring out the most realistic expression and reflection of their inner and outer being as well as -consciously or not- my own.

We achieve the best results in art when we totally identify ourselves with what we want to express. For example if I paint an earring I shouldn't just look at an actual earring and copy it on the canvas but I have to 'feel' the earring as if that earring is the only thing that exists in the world at that moment.

For me painting is communication and self expression without words but I want people to feel free to interpret my art as they will. They can see themselves in them. Just like giving birth to a child, it is inside you and it is your own flesh and blood but after you give birth, the child will start to live its own life. I feel that after the painting comes out of my innermost being I do not want to control how it affects people and what they should see in it.

My paintings are figurative. My favorite medium is oil and my style ranges from expressionism to realism."

Shoshana Kertesz moved to Brooklyn, New York on February 2010. She has had many opportunities to show her work throughout the United States. Her next solo exhibition is going to take place between the 1st of March and the 10th of April, 2011 in the Hanna Studio Gallery at Ringwood, NJ. Her works can be found on her website:

WWW.SHOSHANAKERTESZ.COM

L.E.S. Review

Spring 2011

Copyright © 2011 L.E.S. Review.

Please visit our website www.LESreview.com for more information.

CONTENTS

“Field Trip” p. 1
by Chad Faries

“What Lies Beneath the Tongue” p.4
by Justin Dean Thomas

“woeful masturbation”..... p.5
by Tamryn Spruill

“My Voice” p.7
by Mark Anthony Vigo

“Ars Poetica: A Cento” p.10
by William Cordiero

“SMOKE” p. 11
by Matthue Roth

“OF HUMAN SACRFICE & SACRIFICIAL DESCENT INTO HELL” p.12
by Steven Alvarez

“soundless 6” p.15
by Andrew Topel

“POEM” p.16
by Pablo Conejero Lopez

“Jerrica’s Childhood” and “Untitled..... p.19
by Lisa Flowers

“Toward Hues” p. 20
by Richard Murphy

“Senryu #1”, “Senryu #2”, and “Senryu #3” p. 21
by Ambrose Thompson

“Jesi Belle waits for the hounds” p.22
by Jesi Bender

“East Village Song” and “Bulletin” p.23, 24
by Cesca Janece Waterfield

“Conifer Park” p.25
by Angela Cobb

“digression”, “ode”, and “ode 2” p.27, 28, 29
by Joseph Fink

ode 2

you say “the sun is coming on the moon’s face.”
I laugh because words are irrelevant to that kind of beauty, that kind of beauty is inhuman,
and what I really want to do is look up your skirt.

the city lights shout back at the stars. here’s something:

I imagine spiral galaxies as clumsy drunks, planets as coughs and nebulas as sighs,
time and space as unneeded complications to the untroubled now,
and also I imagine what you look like naked.

seeing you with your clothes off would feel like putting my hand into flour, by which I mean I would like it.

in my grandmother’s pool,
at the house she hasn’t lived at in years,
I would keep my eyes open underwater until they stung so the sky would turn purple behind the overgrown orange tree.

we do what it takes to see something extraordinary.

later I’ll be on a rooftop in a city loud with light, trying to look up your skirt.

but right now I’m in a pool as the purple fades from the sky.
I can smell chlorine and only chlorine.
the sky is as round and clear and blue as the water I’m in,
and all water everywhere. no, bluer.

ode

your balcony is a piece of shit.
effervescent
is not a word anyone would use to describe your shitty balcony or anything else.
no one uses the word effervescent.

my forehead is the base camp of a mountain of hair.
your eyes are the color of gutter water.
gutter water after someone washes their car,
when the soap turns the water effervescent.

I like it,
but what I don't like is your shitty balcony.
your balcony is a piece of shit and also it's cold out here.

Chad Faries was raised mostly in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, but lived in 24 houses by the time he was 10 years old. These experiences are chronicled in his forthcoming memoir, And Then We Moved (Emergency Press February, 2011). His poetry collection, The Border Will Be Soon, was the winner of the Emergency Press open book competition in 2005. He has been published in Exquisite Corpse, Southeast Review, New American Writing, Barrow Street, The Hawaii Review, Afterimage, Post Road, and others. He has a PhD in Creative Writing from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee and was a Fulbright Fellow in Budapest. He is an Asst. Professor at Savannah State University where he also hosts a theme based storytelling and music program on WHCJ 90.3. He now owns a house in Thunderbolt, GA but lives abroad and gets lost on his motorcycle whenever he can. More info can be found at www.chadfaries.com.

Field Trip

Postcard 1

In Munich women parade their bodies from open car doors that salute the passersby with a stiff arm. Within the salute, a white kiss cadence and a potential capitalistic thrust into the womb of body-politic. In the distance a train orgasms as its driving wheel grinds on the track in true ecstasy.

Postcard 2:

Hungarian Plain from the Train

Garbage-burn--table-tennis--panel--egret--Chris-lazy-eyed--graffiti Basin--flood--boot-prints---picnic-----lovers-----lovers Beer---storage---storage---lovers---green---green---pale-green river-silt---blue-metal-roof---green-metal---Small-----panel bog---railroad-track-scribble-----dirt-pile-----combine-parts freight-train---orchards-----beer-drink-----sack-carry bridge-----rubble-----electrical-poles-rubble-----rubble sunflowers-----sunflower-----foreign-girl-sunflowers.

Postcard 3

Tongue the first petal on a hino azalea when wind smashes its lips on the heat of your throat and breaks it all down. We are ones in nights that palpitate and make breeze from this,

the blowing of vowels, deep, and we may fight for a seat at the table.

Postcard 4

In Romania
cart horses have swollen and knotted knees flayed
open like eyelids.
They wink with every broken step while their true eyes tell me what I don't want to hear.

Postcard 5

Sun-done heel
click and matches.
A thumb pressed into the sweet of your knee.

Nudge, tremble sin in the whole of sewer-grate bug-love and beetle-free

I flutter and migrate past reason as the thigh of a crescent moon flexes at the horizon.

The stars are pushing darkness and wild dogs

will never know.

Ripple the folds of their wild curtain call to our hotel radiance shore where we meddle in

{2}

Joseph Fink recently edited A Commonplace Book of the Weird: The Untold Stories of H.P. Lovecraft, in which writers from all over the country tackled the unused ideas left behind by the master of weird fiction. See more information at commonplacebooks.com. He also does other things with his life.

digression

there's this brick wall where no two bricks are the same size, within which there's a window with a perfect map of the world in finger prints, below which there's a heater coughing up the first dust of winter, and on top of which there's two jackets, one scarf, and three gloves.

anyway, I saw a van flip over on 26th street and it reminded me of you.

At fourteen, I learned the important double standard that mothers are not afforded the luxury of falling apart.
Since the age of seventeen
I have wanted mine to leave you.
Did I think that I could love her better than the only man I have ever seen try?
Who says an Oedipus complex was only designed for a son?
You have not loved my mother in the way that she deserves.
Nor have I.
She is too good for this world and we are not worthy of her affections.
You and I are just two cowards, afraid of how close we become when we are not sober.
Because we only hold hands through the necks of wine glasses.
At twenty-three, I see it in her face.
She is searching for you in my tearful apologies.
And the echo of vomit that you never gave her the satisfaction of hearing sounds like relief.
She knows her daughter still suffers from the morning after condition to which by the age of eighteen you were already immune.
Dad, did it all start because of some cruel nun's preschool torture?
Or underneath your condescending cabinet makers veneer did you suffer like me?
Did you grow up feeling ugly?
Did you know that no one would ever love you for the boring person that you were so you grabbed the neck of a bottle and searched to the bottom for the person you were supposed to be.
I have grown out of your shoulders and into your liver.
Because our personalities are as clotted as a Bloody Mary left out overnight.
Is it wrong that the one thing I am proud to say I inherit from you is the one thing that has ripped our family apart?
And as much as I should think of all that when I reach for a drink instead,
I just think of you and wonder if this is the closest we will ever get to the word love.

the perverse headlock of passion. It was just that and some Russians singing, and your naughty silence. It is time for this tea and that,

a thousand lost and pathetic kiss-winks. What happened is just that.

Postcard 6

Wonder sums its numbers
In backstreets and oozes
Into sewer grates.
There is a solution somewhere Deep. And questing can't crack
A code or bend a bar.

But clicks of heels and the smell of powder in a sex gun longing perpetuate the moon to wax and wane like the soft mounds of manicured hair on early summer flesh.

Justin Dean Thomas is a NYC-based singer/songwriter/poet/actor. Born in Boston, MA, Thomas is related to Jack Kerouac through Cleo Surprenant. He dropped out of school at age 14 and spent the next few years hitchhiking and freewheeling across the United States. Upon moving back to South Boston, he worked various jobs – from landscaping, masonry, construction, busking, drug-running, and freelance writing to modeling and acting. Living up and down the East Coast, Thomas had built a small fan base and decided to parlay that energy into New York where he now resides and continues to write and perform both solo and with the downtown rock n roll band "The Bowery Riots" (www.theboweryriots.com). His influences span from classics like Byron and Yeats to Jim Carroll and Bukowski, taking many cues from American Rhythm and Blues, Gospel, and Folk music as well.

www.justindeanthomas.tumblr.com

What Lies Beneath the Tongue

What stars can't tell the day, they scream to the night, and Pierce The window brazenly which bleeds from it it's light. What time tells no bones, it whispers slightest death and rides upon the smoke, which dances on a breath.

What the bottle tells the drunkard, as it sings him to his sleep, and echoes from the inside as its ghost takes from him heat. What wicked kings tell no one, as their villages burn till the dawn, and angels clasp their ears, as the demons sing their songs.

What infidels tell their lovers, On dying december days, Brings us to the river where her body forever lays. What the singapore sailors last words were, as they lay with knives in back, only sea and ship know as they hug the crimson deck

What David told His son, he told not to his wife. What soloman gave sheba, he gave not to his son, And it burned from the temple and lies within its crumbs.

Angela Cobb is a spoken-word poet and stand-up comedian. A 2009 graduate of the State University of New York, College at Oneonta, Cobb was a member of the school's poetry slam team. The team took second place in the 2009 ACUI Regional competition and went on to compete at the national level at the College Unions Poetry Slam Invitational (CUPS!). As a comedian, Cobb's self-deprecating jokes and likable personality embrace life's awkward absurdity. Cobb has performed at venues such as Broadway Comedy Club, New York Comedy Club, and Laugh Lounge. More recently, she was an on-screen participant in "Why Stand-Up?" a documentary film by Frank Vignola. Her poetry is an attempt to flesh out personal insecurities by way of humor and honesty. Cobb currently resides in Brooklyn, New York.

Conifer Park

When I was five years old and had my first loose tooth, you took out a bottle of Jack Daniels, smudged some on your index finger, rubbed it on my gums,
as if to re-christen me:
"Angela,
you are my daughter.
And even though in the future you will try to shake this fact like the bump on your nose which I have given you every time,
every time you reach for a drink,
you will know."
Alcoholism
does not always come with wife beatings and yellings and furniture over-turned,
public humiliation outbursts at PTA functions.
No,
some of us didn't grow up that simple.
When you slept your way through my childhood,
drowning in snores,
waking up only for the fun stuff, Merry Christmas drum sets and tickets to see wrestling at Nassau Coliseum.
When you poured Budweiser into a cartoon canteen to sneak it into the theme park at Disney, were you not an alcoholic?
They told us then, that Conifer Park was "a residential chemical dependency treatment facility, situated on thirty-two wooded acres, offering a beautiful, tranquil setting conducive to recovery."
I ask you now:
where was mom's beautiful, tranquil setting?
Where were her wood acres?
When you chose to give up, her own mother dying of cancer, and you recovered just in time to be by her side at the funeral like a good husband.

Bulletin

The radio says they escaped last night;
two convicts unbuckled from their past,
rising like flies from a rotten rind of fruit.

It is not dawn when I stand and look out the window at the clearing.
I think about the men in prison,

where every rising sun is a red mouth that begs, howling vowels.
Even stars prick the sky's open wound with fricatives of threat.

The fisted haft is determined but it's a desperate blade.

They stab toward release, fugitives in the whirling wooded dark, speeding toward all fresh intentions.

Each dreams his clean slate.
Somewhere near, a woman delivers papers, hauling her life through the world like a tired bitch drags its whelp.

I sit in a kitchen facing east,

risen from a bed that won't swallow me yet.
The hall smells of coffee.
On the counter in glass bowls thaw shanks of beef.

But I know as the men pass her, one feels intention melt like fat on his hot tongue.

Outside husks and grasses shiver in a sudden gust, whines of hounds fill the fields, which empty again.

Tamryn Spruill is a graduate student in the MFA Creative Writing program at Goddard College in Plainfield, Vermont. Her chapbook of poetry, Apotheosis (Word Nerd Editorial Press), was published in 2009. Her fiction can be found in The Medulla Review.

woeful masturbation

jeans around knees,
fingers working on wetness:
memories of old days jutting in and out of a mind caved beneath asphalts of regret.

honey

drizzled

on flesh

and a tongue:

on,

in,

everywhere.

you:

on,

in,

everything.

and i come:

my letters

tumbling

from

blue

skies

in

snowflake

patterns,

coming to rest on littered highways.

fingers dried on denim,
an afterthought
after thoughts of fingers on wetness that are not my own.

East Village Song

*...the gentrification of swaths of New York is hardly new.
But when the changes are chronicled in one place, their pace is staggering.* - New York Times, October 28, 2007

From Port Authority we glide at dawn
To Avenue A with a flask of scotch, Clocking progress that will flatten ere long Gritty sidewalks pocked with chewing gum shot.
 We hold against a superficial fix -
 If you love me, baby, I could just Shush the bulldozers with songs brewing blue, Return St. Ann, a prodigal repaired
To matriarchal crown from NYU.
Even saints struggle in revolving air.
 We love against greed's despicable tricks -
 If you hold me baby, I could just Dance along Bowery with dusk-strange things Cradling a bottle shaped like a whore, Ruby red waltzing through the snow and fringe,
One curling dollar between Tompkins Square.
 We love against privation's lowing ache -
 If you hold me, baby, I could just Sing voodoo luck to a rapturous crowd
The buzz in the club, the hum in our veins.
Punjabi driver says tomorrow's bound.
Like mortal streets, all good things will change.
 We hold against time's fading wick -
 If you love me, baby, I could just

Jesi Bender is a NYC-based poet and painter currently residing in the L.E.S. She graduated with her B.A. in English and Fine Art from Cornell University and is currently interning at the Metropolitan Museum of Art while finishing her M.S. in Library Science (with a concentration in Archival Work) from Pratt. Her chapbook Glossolalia (MFG/Imprint 2010) and other work can be seen on www.jesibender.com.

Jesi Belle waits for the hounds

To Yonah

Jesi Belle waits for the hounds,
With coal round her eyes
And tint on her lips,
Or for a dove released from the sea,
Like breath from a mouth -
And she patiently sits.

By the window, the soft glow
Of a halo of red burns
The whore sits and hopes for Her monomaniacal sailor
Away hunting that thing in the sea
That remains an elusive captor -

It's that something some deep men feel eating inside them (Inside the man is a fish inside a fish inside a man)
He knows she's something that the people do not condone
The cold white of her skin opaquely shimmers like bone
And him, living only "on half a heart and a half lung"
So the woman who loves him sits all alone

In a room cross the water,
Drinking stolen kosher wine
She realizes this is done - Dogs barking in the distance
A vengeful people grow closer,
The people made in His image have won.

The sky is orange as teeth cut through,
The blood runs so sweet (the wine).
Easily erased - though it had been rough asking, 'Who's G-d isn't a giant phallus?'
And silencing the prophetic tongues
Who told her that love wasn't enough.

Now - where is the heart, the core of her flesh?
All I see are her arms, her legs and her head.
They wanted it this way,
As far as I can tell,
So no one would ever be able to say;
"This, this was Jesi Belle".

{22}

Mark Anthony Vigo was born and raised in Brooklyn, NY. He has spent many a summer on The Lower East Side growing up as a kid in the 80's. It was here that he picked up "Down These Mean Streets", the first book that he just picked up because he wanted to read it! Vigo currently resides in Williamsburg and is married with three children. He graduated from Brooklyn Tech H.S. and did a few years of college. Vigo currently works as a construction foreman for a general contracting firm based in NYC. His love for poetry began when he joined his cousin's DJ/Rap group - Vigo was a b-boy and he used to rock the mic!!! As he got older, his perspective changed, but his love for words has always remained.

My Voice

10/10/10

My voice at times,
Barely rises above a whisper,
But not for lack of something to say,
Listen closely when I speak,
And you can hear what I am feeling,
Through my words,
I'll take you there,

Through my doubts,
Through my sorrows,
Through my anger,
Through my joy!

My life experience,
and what it means to me,
about how things used to be,
from a time when I was growing fast,
Then, more than just a boy.

From ages 6 to 13,
No father at home,
due to incarceration,
And before that,
he was just a rolling stone,
like the song says,
"wherever he laid his hat, was his home",
but when he did hang around,
It was cool though,
ya know,

Out to Coney Island,
Even those road trips to the upstate,
to the 7-Lakes,
I didn't get as much time with him,
as I probably would've loved!
But whenever he was around,
it was just great!

Because he always hooked us up,
And Christmastime was always the shit!

{7}

But life, can be just Life sometimes,
And sometimes the script gets flipped,

Hear my voice,
Feel what I feel,
Cut me,
And ink flows to the page,
You thought you might have hurt me,
You are sadly mistaken,
All you've done,
Is engaged my rage!
A rage so furious,
So focused,
So complete,
A rage so blinding,
Brings out the Armeggedon in me,
Its not a place,
I'd like to find myself,
Because I may do something I will regret,
So don't test me to my limits fool,
Cause I'll snap your friggin' neck!

Hear my voice,
See what I see,
The plight of those unfortunate souls,
Vilified, brutalized, gentrified, marginalized,
And all through no fault,
Of their own,

Predatory people come from all walks of life,
From the sheisty real estate brokers,
to "Chacho",
from the bodega,
who starts jackin' up the price,

As soon, as he sees,
a hipster or two,
"Cha-ching! Cha-ching! Cha-ching!"
is all he hears while looking at you,

But "Chacho" it's me, Yo!
You've known me for life,
Si, es la verdad,
but now for that milk,
you must pay the new & improved, gentrified price!

Damn! It's like that Yo!

Ambrose Thompson is a public librarian for the New York Public Library working in the Lower East Side at the Tompkins Square Branch. Starting with Shel Silverstein, I fell in love with poetry. As I grew up my tastes turned to Wordsworth and Blake and from there jumped around to taste and experience all forms. Writing poetry is a form of meditation for me. Forcing the mind to quiet down and listen opens up awareness to experience the world around me.

Senryu #1
immortalized name remind me to memory self identity

Senryu #2
breathe in to exhale breathe in deep my last exhale reciprocity

Senryu #3
sound of midnight snow all the world talking lowly boundaries erode

Richard Murphy's credits include the 2008 Gival Press Poetry Award for my book-length manuscript "Voyeur;" a first book The Apple in the Monkey Tree; chapbooks Great Grandfather, Family Secret, Hunting and Pecking, and Phoems for Mobile Vices, Rescue Lines; poems in Rolling Stone, Poetry, Grand Street, Trespass, The View from Here, New Letters, Pank, Segue, Big Bridge, EOAGH, Fact-Simile, foam:e, and Confrontation; and essays in The International Journal of the Humanities, Journal of the Assembly for Expanded Perspectives on Learning, Reconfigurations: A Journal for Poetics Poetry / Literature and Culture, Fringe, and Journal of Ecocriticism. Derek Walcott has remarked for the cover of my book Voyeur: "Mr. Murphy is a very careful craftsman in his work, a patient and testing intelligence, one of those writers who knows precisely what he wants his style to achieve. His poetry is quiet but packed, carefully wrought, not surrealistically wild, and its range not limited but deliberately narrow. It takes aim." I live in Marblehead, MA and teach writing at VCU.

Toward Hues

The crow flies
while the lollygagging pierces deep into adulthood where point A long gave way to ellipsis

Sí! Mi panito, It's like that!
And just so you know,
the rent's just quadrupled,
on your one-window,
one-bedroom flat!

Hear my voice,
look at my face,
when I speak,
my words,
take flight.
Released into the air,
a soul laid bare,
burdenless,
feeling so light.
But the moment,
sweet,
as,
it is fleeting,
is over,
much,
much,
too soon,
my voice,
the instrument,
provides the music,
for my words,
as my search,
for the next moment, resumes....

William Cordiero has worked as a NYC Teaching Fellow, a staff writer at the theater magazine offonline, and an assistant editor of Epoch. He has an MFA in poetry from Cornell, where he is currently a Ph.D. candidate studying 18th century British literature. Cordiero is also the co-founder of Brooklyn Playwrights Collective and have had several plays produced in regional and off-off-Broadway venues, including a libretto performed at the Johnson Museum of Art. For the past two years he has been the Artist-in-Residence at Risley Residential College. His poems have been published in journals such as Brooklyn Review, lafovea, Baltimore Review, Dirt, and Paradigm, and are forthcoming in Sentence and Word for/Word.

Ars Poetica: A Cento

But if the air
Is suddenly thickened or infected, we are Forced to attend to our breathing with new vigilance,
And the whole thing is set off and Rooted
In life by a series of marvelous touches: it rides
On the air, as is reasonable,
A curious mixture of theatrical styles and conventions.
We have seen how our means of vertical support
May, for the sake of economy
Both of space and material, be gathered, a measure of irony Versus emotional directness, into a hunger for a reality Deeper than everyday life—or nonsense, since What Grützmacher made accessible was not The great works but his falsifications of them, which Might entertain you a whole afternoon with housewifery.
To assume False names and false identities—how much of life is devoted To maintaining these pretenses! The crucial turn-About,
Of course, had already occurred
Before the introduction
Of a special editorial function. —And film
Has proved to be more informative than anecdotal statements: the whole World is passed through the filter of the culture industry.
It is possible for an individual to label himself As a pervert simply Because he lacks basic knowledge of what normal behavior really is; the beginner Should approach style
Warily: pictures and letters are really blood-relations,
And just as lines are moved in the initial stages
In order to extend
Surfaces, to multiply internal frequencies, and to recalibrate amplitudes, Surfaces and volumes too are set in motion ...
Vagueness, then, is less an effect than a precondition—not so much from its life as from its afterlife.
Explore the imagery at length and observe its permutations.

Lisa A. Flowers is a freelance writer, vocalist, poet, and film critic. Raised in Los Angeles and Portland, OR, she is the founder and editor of Vulgar Marsala Press. Her poetry has appeared in The Cortland Review, elimae, and other magazines and online journals. Her poetry collection diatomhero is forthcoming in January of 2011. She currently resides in the Hampton Roads area of Virginia but will soon be relocating to Greenpoint, Brooklyn. Visit her on the web here <http://lisaflowers.blogspot.com/> or here <http://lisafloweronlinework.blogspot.com/>

JERRICA'S CHILDHOOD

Came out into adulthood
A shiny black pup
From between the thighs of dog years.
Someone went ahead at the speed of light Came back; said: "I didn't see Your face in the world past the age of 8"
Her guardian angel
Put Jerrica's fate under anesthesia; while it was out Grafted some skin from her childhood Onto the rest of her life...
Which sped ahead, having swallowed its future in a balloon
It hoped wouldn't burst
By the time she could get to a bathroom at, age, say, 75-
Or another respectable autumn year.

UNTITLED

Not much point in karma
When you don't know what you're being punished for;
Somehow it strips the sweetness from just desserts
Or nothing to fear but fear itself
As the Youth Who Went Forth To Learn What Fear Was
Would drag a dead man into bed with him,
Then get petulant when the stranger used his revival
To demonstrate what "chemistry" can do
When it gets into a corpse on a soft Southern night.

And it sort of does. But It doesn't
When nothing makes any sense
When I don't know have a face or taste Or smell or a look. What's your look?
Why did you choose to look the way you look?
Did you choose the way you look? I did

I've always chosen my looks
For several reasons
I have a history of looks First it was the boots, then it was The hair, once it was platinum blonde Twice it was black Always for a good reason I once read that people born on July twenty second have a fluctuating Vocational identity. I really do My personality doesn't exist My personality is formed by Many different things I like Depending on the way
I wake up. If I wake up With my left foot, I don't Like anything. Not even My identity. Just to give you an Example right now I'm watching A documentary about Johnny Cash And before I was watching an Elvis documentary and I really thought I wanted to have a pompadour

I hope this was an interesting poem Was it? Was it?
"No, I didn't like your poem"
"I thought it was pretentious"
"but I'm kind of pretentious myself
So I shouldn't say anything"
All I really, really, really care about
Is the hair around my nipples
The Sun coming down
Another day is gone
It will get dark and there will be No more possibilities available
For Today. Hopefully I made some Art Something

Matthue Roth is the author of Losers (<http://www.amazon.com/dp/0545068932?tag=215live365-20>), a novel about Russian Jewish geeks, as well as three other books. His screenplay "1/20" was just made into a feature film. He lives in Brooklyn and keeps a secret diary at www.matthue.com.

SMOKE

She would've smoked right under the blood-red sky of a no-smoking sign, but she didn't smoke.

The most she could manage was eating on the morning train, but hell,
this was New York.
Everybody ate.

She had grown up a Hasidic Jew.
They had rules for everything.

She settled for turning the lights off on Shabbos, not washing her hands before she broke bread, and making out with herself feverishly, all over the mirror before going to bed.

OF HUMAN SACRIFICE & SACRIFICIAL DESCENT INTO HELL: legit copy / MS 47158h Paper ink draft / November

here in Mexico we find Chaley Chastitellez in McTlán after escaping the treachery of creamy sunlit Xochitl Flores / who sd to our knight “gud bai” after his quote/unquote Great Refusal & after many months after our fair Xochitl threw him down & came kissy kiss kiss facedown upon him devouring him & ripping open his pecho / qué pachanga / scratching to hell his legs & arms & screaming ¡ Santiago !
¡ Santiago ! & dispatching him thoroughly
even despite his fair swordplay then blackening his slowing heart w/ copalsmoke wrapped in nopales

& now first stop / here / in Death’s abode Chaley finds himself presented w/ one of La Muerte’s jovencita emissary agents: & look: looking good for this pink pearl of perfection appears painful / her hair striped agate clotted w/ blood into braids never combed or parted & her chocolatl eyes of pure stars make no mistake freeze to the bone & have the sun’s seeing & they sing rain / rain & she swells him w/ embalmed songs & up above: sagging moon / thick & pregnant

then she sez “no temas donde vayas

“que has de morir “donde debes . . .

“powerfully sacred / & when it FILLS OUR WORLD /

“yea

“like rayos of luz thru & thru”

& “hasta que tomé la píldora se me quitó el dolor”

but her florid speech spoken to no one in particular—mind Chaley hadn’t sufficient Spanish to do w/ her & anyway / no smell

& behold—¡Chaley Chastitellez!—

{12}

That happen to look good together
I want to kill you “I want to touch you”
“Who’s your father?”
“Where’s your mother?”
What don’t you drink some Chamomile tea and relax?
Thank you

I have had this black handkerchief
For about eight years
It has been with me through
The worst and the best
As they say
I’m probably ten years older Than that guy over there
This is messed up
I’ll be twenty years old
In ten years
When the golden age is happening I’ll be the same age as
The subject of my dream
With hanging tits
It was very comforting as well as Special to be able to touch and Be friends with such an icon of The nineties films

All I’m trying to do is To keep myself busy so they don’t Suspect I’m depressed. So they think I’m doing “just fine”
Like the rest. Like the ones Who sit in restaurants and smile
Yes, I know the reason why I feel Threatened by your happiness
And your coolness is because I wish I was happy like you. But I know You can’t be that happy Why pretend? Or maybe you’re Only trying to be “just fine”, aren’t you?
Maybe I have to try harder
To be happy, I mean, like right now I’m trying to be A talented poet. What for?
I don’t know. I’m just trying because I’m supposed to My father is a poet too
It is the only thing that balances
His nerves out. I thought Maybe it balances mine too

{17}

POEM

That was us today
A couple of handsome Guys on the corner of Orchard
And Broome. I don't like This resource
Consisting on naming
The streets
Just so this can sound More engaging. But it is Where we were standing

Our acquaintance was inside
The clothing store
It was sunny
The air is cold now so the sun felt good It made us all look crisp and elegant Like in one of those situations
In which people look crisp and elegant
But I didn't care at all
It all makes me feel bored
I know it's a self defensive reaction Caused by disappointment
She is probably very lonely
Nobody called for her birthday So she calls. She knows its
The fall of the American empire
It's the end of the world I'm writing for nothing. Just To keep up with all this art Around me. All over
Everywhere
Call me an impostor
Call me a liar. What's so honest
About what you do?
Tell me what's your mission
In this world? In this life?
In this city? In this decadent
New York in which we live
All I can do is to keep on writing
To feel decent, mature, responsible,
Active, handsome, energetic
What a nice coat. "I like your coat".
I likes your shoes. "I want your shoes"
"I want your coat"
It's not a coat. It's an illusion
Two pieces of cheap old fabric {16}

truchas yr name ; stinks ! sudden overwhelming stench more than carrion in Tucson in July—more than dead salmon filling dry creekbeds in Alaska in August—& he sickens & groans / folds & darkness twists in him like a river—weighing him down . . .
 & he contemplates again to go—yeah again—to leave his hated & O so heated AZtlán . . .
—which he later does—claro—but he continues on pulling himself along dragging along some whitemud & on passing this jovencita voicing one guttural grassy ass & smiling & suddenly he strolls [sic ¿ ?]
further into his despondent baroque hallucination McTlanuense until he reaches that forested juncture [¿?]
& these cosmic trees—fat & furbarked / w/ sky branches—& he sits beneath one's shadows which shines specks of stars & finds a smoking mirror—he looks at his face & this mirror cracks / & his face wrinkles & he sees himself as puro viejo / face like a battered stone & so he instantly sleeps—later wakes—¿in his dream?
& he walks . . . [margin: "& he wakes &c"] gritos de dolores sounding in his ears . . . death to gachupines &c [margin: "&c &c"] & so he squats on a slab of unrefined copper to rest . . .
his hands leaning on this ore lump & yonder AZtlán shining in the distance he looking down from some height in space of time / & as for space of space he's there where his gaze lands which as he sees & considers effects tears to rush into his eyes—
cold sobs cut his throat—er / O . . . constructed tears of smeared centuries gone dripping down his face & sorrowfully falling to stone & piercing his heart—& as he wipes his face shadows linger where his hands rest
/
 & he wakes / ¿into another dream?
& who else but one-armed Álvaro Obregón appears to him

& he looks up: banners reading “imposition / resistance / adaptation / “transformation”

“sound concepts güey” Obry sez then “¿where you goin?”

& immediately Chaley responds “to a place

“of red daylight—to find some wisdom”

“...” sez Obregón his mouth full of frozen blood

& Chaley wakes again—[¿ ?]

& again Obregón tho this time missing the opposite arm

“¿red daylight?”

“¿know it?”

“don’t know” sez Obry—“but have a plug of this pulqazo—just fer ye”

“well I won’t sey no” & he sips the brew from a yellow popote sweet wine & sweeter still yet

& instantly / bien pedo / perfectamente drunk he falls

/ faints / on calle & dreams—sleeps—his snores echo for miles in these canyons

& he ¿wakes? ¿dreams of waking?

& finds only silence—pure

& an empty rusted town of concrete

& rebar . . .

& a new peak—btwn Popocatépetl & Iztaccíhuatl

& snow slowly descends his face whitemudcaked . . .

& surrounded by carcasses of books—pages lost among the dead

& that weight oppresses him—so he weeps for these books—then sings & his tears again endlessly cold

& long sighs issue deep from his guts until he sleeps—

& he wakes—¿or dreams?—

to a beach—& there a hulk of serpents formed into a raft—

& directly he reaches into his pocket

& produces his MTA Metrocard which he promptly presents to the largest snake’s mouth / which it sucks & it slides an entry for Chaley & he boards

& he sails into that diamond ocean

this boat gliding on burning waters into that land of burning daylight—

on the rim of the great sea

& his face reflects in ocean

Andrew Topel has been known to be brief.

